

SOCIETY and PERSONAL ACTIVITIES of WOMEN

SOCIETY

Under a canopy formed of a large American flag which was suspended from the corner lights of the Rotary room of the Oliver hotel, two hundred ex-service men, members of the American Legion and their friends danced and made merry last evening to celebrate the anniversary of the signing of the Armistice. The walls of the Rotary room were attractively decorated in Old Glory and in one corner a Salvation Army bazaar was featured in which two pretty French maids served punch throughout the evening to the guests. Denny's special six-piece orchestra played the program of dances. The committee in charge of the delightful affair were: Dr. F. R. Clapp, Dr. E. J. Lent, Dr. R. L. Sosenich, J. Cunningham, Clark Carson, A. R. Mac Donald, Robert Swintz, Walter Heller, Emil Johnson and Donald Eldridge.

On Thursday afternoon the Music Department of the Progress club presented to more than one hundred members and guests, the most representative of American opera, "Robin Hood." The program followed: "When a Maiden Weds," by Mrs. W. J. Kennedy, accompanied by Mrs. Floyd Gaumer; "Amoroso Song," by L. L. Kemper, accompanied by his daughter, Miss Harriet Kemper; "Serenade," by Mrs. W. Nickels, accompanied by Miss Helen Burke; a duet "Robin Hood and Maid Marion," by Mrs. L. H. Wirt and Mrs. Nickels; a solo, "Forest Song," by Miss Glendora Judson, accompanied by Miss Helen Burke. Preceding the musical numbers Miss May Applegate read the story of the opera. Mrs. James MacLoney and Miss Helen Burke were in charge of the program. The next meeting of the club will be held Saturday, Dec. 10, instead of Thursday, Dec. 8, as announced. The program will consist of a reading of "Madam Butterfly" by Mrs. E. M. Morris, accompanied on the piano by Mrs. G. A. Farabaugh. Non club members will be admitted by the payment of the regular guest fee.

Revelations of A Wife

By ADRIAN GARRISON

WHY MRS. TIGER BEGGED MADGE NOT TO WORRY.

Alas! for both my boast and my toast. My next day's quest for a home was a fruitless affair, from which I returned fatigued and disheartened.

On account of Marion I had not fulfilled my threat to start at day-break, but it was at an extremely early hour that the child and I, fortified by one of Mrs. Tiger's excellent breakfasts, turned out of the farmhouse gate into the road. I had persuaded Lillian to let Marion sleep with me, so that we got off without awakening her from the profound restful slumber into which she had fallen soon after I had insisted upon her going to bed.

"Oh, Auntie Madge!" the little girl exclaimed as the car sped down the road. "I think this is wonderful to go hunting houses for you. It will have to be a big one, won't it? For you have to have so many bedrooms. And are you going to have a playroom for Junior? He's most big enough now. What in the world is just getting lots of toys. And if he had a playroom I could come over and take care of him when you were busy, and you wouldn't have to know he was in the house."

"I hope we can promise the playroom, Marion," I said smiling at her pretty enthusiasm, but before I began to proceed far upon my quest I began rapidly to revise downward my rather exacting requirements for comfort in a home, and the playroom was one of the first things I mentally threw overboard.

Without Luck. For I soon found that the housing conditions near New York were reproduced in this east end of the island. During my quest I learned that many families, finding it impossible to get decent living quarters within the commuting zone, had seized the opportunity to give them children the many advantages of the wonderful section, and had rented or bought all the available houses in every village. Thus, the breadwinner of the family, with business or profession in the city, could join his loved ones at week-ends, but most of the people left stranded by the sudden demand had no choice in the matter. They simply went down like the dove, forth from the ark of their old-time security, and traveled until they found a resting place.

My sympathy with that Biblical dove approached the teary point as the day wore on, and I found no trace of any place to wait either in Sag Harbor or any of the neighboring villages. Determined to leave no stone unturned, I conscientiously investigated the places for sale also, realizing that I might be compelled to purchase a place if I could not rent one, but I soon found that all the homes suitable for a family such as mine had been taken. The ones that were left were either country estates, prohibitive in size and cost, or tiny cottages, utterly impossible from my standpoint.

"Don't You Fret." As I turned toward the Tiger farm at last, reluctant to give up the quest, but warmed by the sun that it was growing late, I felt utterly beaten, and more than a little frightened. What in the world was I to do? If I could find no place at all I would be compelled to auction all my cherished household belongings, and face the prospect of boarding for an indefinite time.

Marion nestled close to me and spoke softly, reassuringly. "Don't you worry, Auntie Madge. Jerry Tiger will find you a place. He said if I didn't find anything to come to him, and he'd tell me where there was a house that 'would be just right for Miss' Graham, but it would need considerable fixing up." Her childish, unconscious imitation of Jerry Tiger was inimitable. I paid no serious attention, however, to her words, for I knew Jerry to be—as his mother expressed it—"chuck full" of the most ridiculous and far-fetched schemes. If he had a building in his mind for me it was probably of the general dimension of an abandoned hen coop.

But, of course, I did not wound Marion with any derogatory reflection as to Jerry's ability to produce a home upon a minute's notice. In Marion's childish eyes, Jerry Tiger is a hero, and there is nothing impossible for him to perform.

"All right, Marion," I said, smiling down at her eager, upturned face. "We'll try once more tomorrow, and then we'll see what Jerry has."

But I knew that there would be no shadow of use to try again on the morrow. I had exhausted every possibility, and I was so fatigued myself that even the terrifying problem before me was beginning to be dwarfed by need of rest and a warm supper.

As the car turned in at the gate, Lillian and Mrs. Tiger appeared upon the veranda.

"Did you get anything?" Mrs.

Tiger called as they started to walk toward me. I shook my head dumbly, for I was feeling more strongly every second the reaction from my long and fatiguing day. Mrs. Tiger and Lillian looked at each other, then Mrs. Tiger spoke.

"Now, don't you fret. I've been telling Miss Underwood about a place you might get. But you shan't hear one word about it till you have had a chance to lie down a bit and eat your supper. Get right out and go in and lie down till supper. It's almost ready. Tiger will put the car in the barn."

THE HOME KITCHEN

By JEANNETTE YOUNG NORTON

The Authority on Home Cooking

FIVE UNUSUALLY TASTY AND ODD MEAT MIXTURES.

The question of the economical use of so-called leftovers, we often are told, has been solved by French housewives more perfectly than by the home cooks of any other nation. Perhaps this is true, but here in America we have had such an abundance of food that until the war needs were forced upon us economy did not figure so extensively in our household plans. France has had a longer experience in this line. Many people to-day, smaller space requiring more intensive cultivation, and greater need of economy among the peasant classes all helped to bring about the conditions for closer household economy.

Americans, as a rule, do not like made dishes and they are not partial to sauces and crust-enclosed meats, so it is a matter of education to make them realize the importance of this class of cookery, and the necessity of making use of every scrap of food. For smaller space and a few of the leftover combinations which will perhaps appeal most strongly to American housewives.

Heart Patties. Wash and trim three lamb's hearts, then boil them until very tender. Chop the hearts fine, and add to them a grated onion, a teaspoonful each of minced pepper, celery and parsley and two tablespoonfuls of chopped nuts. Mix well, and add a tablespoonful of very dry bread crumbs and enough white sauce to moisten well. Reheat and fill hot patty shells with the mixture and turn a little of the white sauce over each. Garnish with a spray of parsley and a little strip of broiled bacon.

Tripe Surprise. Cut one pound of tripe into small pieces and parboil 20 minutes. Drain the tripe and add to it a cupful of finely minced cold boiled ham, a grated onion, a minced pepper, half a can of chopped mushrooms, pepper, salt, and enough tomato sauce, not too thick, to moisten well. Reheat and serve on toast squares garnished with slices of broiled potatoes.

Mixed Meats Jellied. Take as many sorts of leftover meats as you have on hand and chop them very fine. Add half a cupful of chopped fresh olives, a quarter of a cupful of chopped nuts, salt, pepper, the juice of an onion, and a diced, hard-boiled egg. Take a small can of tomatoes and add a sliced onion, a stalk of celery, a minced pepper and a teaspoonful of curry powder. Boil gently for 20 minutes, strain and add three-quarters of a package of powdered gelatin that has been dissolved in warm water. Strain and cool, then mix with the meat mixture. Pour into a mould and set to chill. Unmould on lettuce leaves and cut in slices. Serve with mayonnaise or any well-liked sauce. This is excellent for a luncheon dish.

Tomorrow's HOROSCOPE By Genevieve Kemble SATURDAY, NOV. 12. While this may be an interesting day, as read from certain peculiar sidereal operations, yet it cannot be considered fortunate for matters of material importance. The dominating over is from Neptune, both by Lunar and Mutual direction. Under this sway all corporations, secret bodies and mystical organizations, as well as all secret diplomacy and intrigues or conspiracy should thrive—although the influence is not sinister. The higher expressions of art and advanced thought or emotions should also prosper under the subtle and eccentric sway of this mysterious orb.

Those whose birthday it is should keep their worldly affairs well in hand, and not jeopardize their money. A child born on this day be peculiar and eccentric, but talented in out-of-the-ordinary ways. It may have little regard for money or worldly goods, which it may squander unless well taught.

ADVICE TO GIRLS

By ANNIE LAURIE

Dear Annie Laurie: I am not in love, neither is my heart broken, for I do not believe in such silly nonsense. It is just that I am puzzled and want you to help me in this matter. All summer a young man has been calling on me, and we were good friends and pals, and sometimes his words and actions would indicate that he cared for me. But all at once and without any apparent reason, he stopped calling for a long time. One evening about a week ago he called again.

He told me that he liked and respected me, but that was not love, and in the future he wanted us to be as brother and sister. I understand that perfectly, and am willing to regard him as a brother if he so wishes.

He did not offer to make another engagement with me, but told me to phone or write him any time I wanted him to call. Just before going he asked me for his class ring, which he had given me in exchange for mine some time ago. So here is the question.

Do you think that he does not wish to see me any more, and took that way of telling me, or was he sincere? As I do not want to lose his friendship, would it be proper for me to write him, asking him to call again? If you think he does not wish to see me again I shall let the white matter drop and forget him.

BILLY: Why not take the young man at his word and accept him as a good friend and "brother." Had he not wished to see you again he might easily have stayed away. I would, as he suggested, ask him to come and see you and be glad that you have the frank, honest friendship of a young man whose companionship you enjoy.

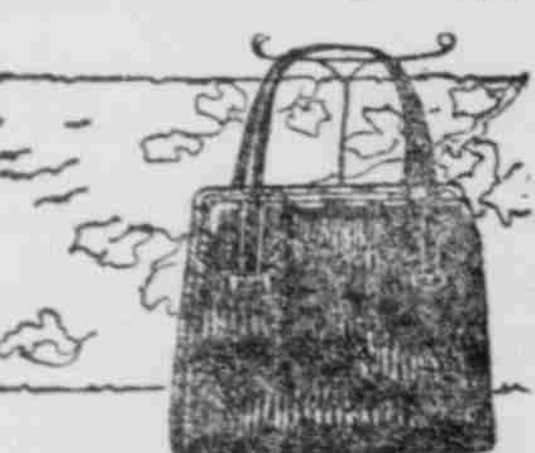

Dear Annie Laurie: Will you please help me? I am in love with a young man. He seems to care for me, and takes me to his home. His folks think lots of me, and my parents like him. He wants to marry me as soon as I am old enough. He is away working now, and writes to me. My aunt seems to like him, too, and she does everything to make me jealous. Please tell me what to do when she acts that way. BLONDE.

BLONDE: Your aunt does not mean to make you jealous. At all events you can do nothing save to trust him and be happy. If he loves you he will not be won away from you.
